Java is one of the most popular programming languages in the world: it was created in 1995, quickly gained popularity and has not lost it for many years.

Java is an incredibly developed and in-demand programming language, as evidenced by its almost limitless scope. Java web development can be used for:

1. Mobile development – the world's most popular Android operating system runs on Java. Don't forget about J2ME applications for the budget segment;
2. Java for web development – it's hard to even imagine how many mobile versions of websites are written in Java;
3. Desktop software – the widest range of applications from games (Minecraft) to office programs (Open Office). For embedded systems, Java is also flawless;
4. Financial area – such giants as Barclays, Citigroup, Goldman Sachs actively use Java for internal electronic systems and as a tool for creating custom applications;
5. Big data is a very relevant area today associated with the processing, forecasting and modeling of information.

Many famous projects has been written in Java today. Here are just a few of the well-known projects where Java code is used:

- Ebay. The largest online auction based on Java architecture;
- Amazon. An international online store and marketplace for other stores using Java for architecture and scaling;
- LinkedIn. This social network for business contacts is also predominantly written in Java;
- Google. Uses Java extensively in services such as GTalk or Google Plus;
