---	--	--

In the modern world, game development is one of the largest segments of the entertainment industry. The scale of the gaming industry is comparable to, for example, the film industry. And in terms of growth rate over the past five years, the mobile game development industry has significantly outpaced it.

Game development has long stood out from other forms of entertainment in terms of the degree of influence on consumers and their involvement in the interactive environment offered by mobile games.

Mobile game development cannot be viewed in isolation from the computer game industry as a whole. The actual creation of games is only part of a complex "ecosystem" that provides by game development companies the full life cycle of production, distribution and consumption of such complex products as mobile games.

A large number of game development companies and independent teams are involved in the creation of mobile games. Specialists of different professions are involved in game development: programmers, game designers, artists, QA specialists, etc.

To create a quality game that can be successful, you need to:

- Study the market, come up with an idea.
- Select the category of the future game.
- Work out the process and mechanics.
- Select platform.
- Create a great design.
- Build a monetization plan.
- Develop a game.

Large game development companies of 100+ specialists are involved in the development of large commercial gaming products. And such projects in development can cost tens of millions of dollar.

However, a successful game can be developed by small game development companies. This is all because there are a large number of open and wide-ranging platforms in the market, crowdfunding platforms, and affordable distribution channels, which facilitate this.
